Happy New Year.

In case you have not seen this, it might be something to consider in South Park, perhaps under the 10 freeway at Flower.

See you later this afternoon.

When Manhattan's High Line opened on the west side in 2009, locals and visitors alike flocked to the revitalized railroad trestle to marvel at its transformation into a gorgeous and walkable park. Arguably the most famous urban adaptive reuse project in America, the High Line made industrial reuse cool and prompted a wave of creative development. read more...
